There are some indications of the form a Soviet protest of the Midas satellite, which passes over some part of Russia at least once every three days, might take.

Last October, A. G. Zhukov, described as executive secretary of the Scientific Research Committee of the Soviet Institute of Law, wrote an article in the Russian publication "International Affairs," making these points.

Johnny, Where's Your Gun?

War was going to be different after the United States used two atomic bombs to sidestep a massive beachhead operation against Japan's land troops.

There wasn't going to be any more manto-man fighting. Mass combat was going to be something children of the future would read about, like battles between Greek and

Nuclear physics was going to take care of everything. The country with the fission bombs could call the turn and be the peacemaker, if it chose. The United States would so choose. It would be the peacemaker. The United Nations would back it up with international sanctions. The United States had the

Many things have happened since that was true

The Soviet Union developed its own Abomb. Now there were two peacemakers, instead of one. Then came the H-bomb, ours and theirs. Now the neutron bomb is coming, theirs instead of ours, unless we hustle.

THE SOVIET UNION developed its own ideas of "peace," in conflict with our ideas. The clash is called the "cold war," a mid-20th-century version of the balance-of-power politics that nations have practiced since the memory of man runneth not to the contrary.

But throughout all that has happened, the United States has clung to the idea that nuclear physics would take care of everything - that powerful planes or powerful rockets would transport nuclear bombs to the point of application and that would be

Of if that was too drastic for the circumstances, smaller nuclear bombs would be lobbed and hurled to the point of application by smaller planes, artillery pieces, or even by light portable contraptions that a man could carry on his back.

There wasn't going to be any more manto-man fighting. Military manpower had given way to military brainpower.

My Fellow Countrymen

President Kennedy has taken note, no doubt, of Sen. Hubert Humphrey's proposal that he should come out of his presidential shell and communicate more with his countrymen

Coming from the ultra-articulate Humphrey, who threatened at one time to tallk John Kennedy out of the running in Wisconsin and West Virginia when the two were rivals for a presidential nomination, the proposal is like the runner-up in a beauty contest telling the winner to learn pupil.

But in truth something has gone sour about our young president's ability to communicate with his countrymen. He's in

In 1932 a newcomer, Franklin D. Roosevelt, revealed what could be done with a 'fireside chat' style. Whereas Herbert Hoover's speeches read better than the v sounded, Franklin Roosevelt's speeches sounded better than they read.

MR. ROOSEVELT might have had trouble on television, but that was not something he had to worry about. Harry Truman did have to worry about it. He never did learn to keep that one hand out of the picture, to phrase his speeches and to look like anything but a man chopping wood while read-

Once Over

As if stocks weren't erratic enough, and with millions of little investors all "shook up," this is the time picked by Washington and Securities Exchange for splitting nervous systems five for one. At a time when markets need a friend the authorities send a

Eighteen month investigation could mean merger of Fireside Tensions, Inc., with Ragged Nerves, Unlimited. We hope SEC will not use line "This notice of investigation is not a solicitation to buy or an offer to sell the idea. For details consult prospectus."

Questions to be asked in inquiry haven't been announced, but one being asked by lots of people in market is, "Should I quit while I am ahead?" Some corrections are needed in stock markets to protect public, but why the long wait during which "a stockholder in every home and two extra dividends in every pot." was developed into a national slogan, with pretty wide support by federal and market agencies?

Some suggested queries:

1. Do stock exchange boards need symbol "BTO" (Beware This On) for some cheap stocks and a large ed "NA" for No Assets. 2. Are there too many sharp operators or too many dull investors?

3. Is there any sense in firing kids out of college for basketball fixes when similar thing is done by some stock market characters working without the basket?

4. Shouldn't brokers, when asked advice on a security of almost no value, be required to make the candid reply "you can do better

This is the background for the exciting possibility that the United States now will firm up its position on Berlin by calling up a million reservists.

IF THIS WERE done, it would signify that the United States was preparing for a showdown in mass fighting. It would be intended to convince strategists calling the turn in the Kremlin that the United States wasn't bluffing in its pledge to fight for the right to stay in Berlin.

Whether the Kremlinites would be convinced is anybody's guess. But better than our own Pentagonites, the Kremlinites know that even 10 million reservists snatched from civilian life to beef up the U.S. military establishments could not save Berlin if the Communists decided to gobble it up. The city is militarily indefensible. It lies 110 miles inside Communist-controlled East Germany. It is a hostage of the Communists.

A beefed-up military force could be used to good effect only to thwart direct aggression against the Western Powers - and no one even has mentioned that as a possibility.

THE UNITED STATES is playing a numbers game with the Soviet Union, hoping to convince its leaders they will press for a crisis in Berlin at the risk of mobilizing the United States for the kind of mass combat that supposedly went out of existence when the nuclear era dawned.

Where and how the mass manpower would be used is indeterminate, unless U.S. militarists believe something far greater than Berlin is endangered. Is Berlin a false alarm? Is the real danger somewhere else,

In any event, it now becomes clear that nuclear fusion and fission have not replaced manpower as a deterrent force.

When necks begin to get red in the chancellories and the general headquarters in 1961, the word still goes out for Johnny to find his gun and get it ready.

ing a missive from his mother-in-law. Dwight Eisenhower had trouble with tele-

He had discarded some distracting mannerisms, such as pushing up his glasses, making gutteral noises between words and gluing his eyes to his script. His actorcoach, Robert Montgomery, had a good

Mr. Kennedy's words read better than they sound. But for both reading and speaking he needs to remember that direct communication is based on reaching the popular mind. His tendency is to be too highflown in his messages. His speech-writer needs to come down a notch. Mr. Kennedy needs to get some of the Boston Irish ac-

He should tape that pump-handling right arm to his side. He should learn to speak more deliberately and avoid the appearance of racing through a recitation to get it

THIS IS a tricky era for communications. William Jennings Bryan and the orators of old would be hopeless. Wendell Willkie and his croaking voice, Thomas E. Dewey and his too-unctuous manner, Alf Landon's Kansas drawl, Adlai E. Stevenson's bad habit of getting shrill-all these things have had an impact-all bad.

Our young president may have discovered shortcomings about his speaking that make him diffident. He may need, chiefly, some coaching to restore his confidence about the press, television and radio-the three ways in which a modern president must communicate with his countrymen.

By JOSEPH L. BLOCK

These days most of us, whether we know it or not, are living our lives with split personalities in respect to national affairs.

On the one hand, we cannot read the newspapers without being keenly aware that our nation and its free institutions are in deadly peril

The Communist encroachments in Cuba, Southeast Asia and elsewhere in the world, the oft-repeated statements of the Soviets that they will "bury us" and their persistent efforts on all front to have their power and their system prevail lead inescapably to this

On the other hand, we pursue the even tenor of our ways, doing the same things we always have done as if there were no danger to the survival of our society and our nation.

WE RATIONALIZE this inconsistency, either by hoping the whole thing will disappear as if it were a bad dream or by thinking that this is somehow a problem for government to solve and that each of us individually can do nothing about it.

We hear the President say, "Ask not what your country can do for you - ask what you can do for your country," and we reply, if we reply at all, by challenging him to tell us prexisely

From time to time, in his speeches and congressional messages, he is indicating guide lines as to the course of action which whould be pursued by our

In his May 25 address to the Congress he said, "Labor and sponsible wage-and-price policies in these critical times."

Here is one very important area in which, it seems to me, a most valuable contribution to the welfare of the nation can be made. In this momentous struggle in which we are engaged, can we afford collective bargaining as

Can we afford devastating strikes, a continuation of the wage-price spiral, featherbedding, abnormal unemployment? I think not, and I believe most Americans share this view-

BUT, TO CHANGE our course necessitates not only a major and determined effort by those directly engaged in collective bargaining but also the understanding and support of the millions of Americans they represent.

This is no plea for governmental control of wages and prices. Indeed, it is quite the reverse, for if our free institutions are to survive they must, to the greatest extent possible, be maintained by the voluntary efforts of our

Compulsion in this regard, I believe, should be used only as a last resort as, for example, in the event of an all-out shooting

In the light of existing conditions, labor and management must attempt to settle their differences by placing the nation's* welfare first and seeking the truth to the best of their respective abilities rather than acting solely on self-interest and emotion as has so often been the case heretofore.

Labor and management must explore the impact on the nation of the economic package they are negotiating.

management must - and I am tion, adversely affect our balance confident they will - pursue re- of payments, accelerate the outflow of gold?

These questions, and not "catching up with the Joneses," or having something to brag about at the next union meeting -- familiar motivations of the past should now govern economic decisions at the bargaining table.

Nor should the country be hamstrung by any type of featherbedding. This is the touchiest of subjects, but it cannot be ignored.

Where there is reason to believe such practices exist, the problem should be explored by labor and management.

This can be done through thirdparty studies, if necessary, or by any other means which will reveal the true facts and set the stage for remedial action with proper regard for the all-important humanitarian factors involved.

And what of unemployment? Surely in the case of unemployment caused by changes in methods and machinery (often called automation) labor and management can do much to be BETTER PLANNING well in advance of change, increased training and counseling programs, improved severance and unemployment compensation systems are among possible answers.

And certainly they can jointly attack discrimination in employment and promotion due to race, color, creed, age or sex. These artificial barriers should have no place in our scheme of things.

The need for constructive in labor-management relationships is imperative. Everyone concerned must strive diligently to square his actions with the best interests of our country and all our people.

At such a time as this, with the survival of our nation and our freedom at stake, we can ill afford collective bargaining as

Nuclear Ban May Have Helped Soviets

Did the Soviet Union outwit and outmaneuver the United States in the last two years and keep America from developing new weapons in the nuclear field? Has Russia today a lead of more than a year?

Secret meetings of scientists are scheduled to take place in Western European David Cawrence locations soon, and they hope to help find the answer to the big question - is the United States justified in resuming underground

Mr. Kennedy will make the final decision after he has received the advice of the special committee of scientists in Washington appointed to study "the serious questions involved" in the continuance of the volunatry ban on testing by the United

But, even in advance of the President's decision, the manifestations of concern among sciitself. Primarily they are concerned about the so-called neutron

Basically the neutron bomb is a tactical weapon. It is for use in ground warfare as army fights army.

It can destroy opposing regiments in an instant and yet confine to a small area its damage to property. It is a weapon that could revolutionize warfare.

The West hasn't developed the neutron bomb but its scientists feel as certain about it in theory as they did about the atomic bomb before it was actually test-

The neutron bomb, moreover, can be tested underground. Such testing creates no fall out and injures no one - a factor that originally gave rise to the whole propaganda for the suspension of nuclear tests

Why, then, doesn't the United States go ahead and test the neutron bomb so as to be at least even with the Russians if, in fact, they have already made their test in secret and know what the weapon can do?

Nobody knows positively the facts as to Russia's nuclear position. Hence, the all-important question is whether the United States can take the chance and defer testing any longer.

The worldwide propaganda to suspend tests was started by the Russians. They infiltrated universities and colleges here and there and got enough scientists on their side to make speeches deploring the dangers of "fall out."

THE UNITED STATES government succumbed in 1958 to the demand largely under pressure from Great Britain, where the left wing made it a penetrating issue in domestic politics.

Confident of its own lead in the nuclear field, the Washington administration went along with the movement to suspend nuclear testing on its own but the discussions and conferences to negotiate a treaty have drifted along without agreement.

It looks now as if the Soviets never intended to agree and have purposely prolonged the talks at Geneva. But how long should the United States play into the hands of the Soviets by delaying a resumption of nuclear tests? About the only reason against resumption that is heard discussed is the possibility that the Communists will seek to get a propaganda advantage out of it throughout the world.

If, however, the West can make clear that there is no danger in underground testing, the disadvantages would appear to be outweighed by the advantages - the chance to perfect the neutron

Why dilly-dally any longer with the Soviets?

The scientists are by no means in agreement as to whether the neutron bomb can be perfected. but the military theory which has governed the reasoning of a belligerent since time immemorial is that it is not safe to take chances and trust the enemy.

IT IS SIGNIFICANT that in Britain, where two years ago the demand to stop nuclear testing was very strong, public sentiment now seems to favor a resump-

Editorials in the press no longer talk of the suspension of testing as necessary. On the contrary, the argument is made that the West has tried in every conceivable way to reach an agreement with the Soviets and can wait no longer.

What is the reason for the change in Britain?

One explanation given this writer by a scientist with a knowledge of some of the things going oi. in European technical circles is that the British know far more than they did two years ago about the whole nuclear field.

They have been given a vast amount of information by the United States government and hence are much more aware now of the dangers of a prolonged suspension of testing. But the basic question concerns not merely a more effective way to fight a nuclear war. It concerns a possible influence on the very persons who are pressing for agreement to limit the use of nuclear weapons.

If it turns out that a neutron bomb can inflict its blow on a larger area than a battlefield, an entirely new look at the whole problem will be necessary on all TESTING to get at the truth may turn out, therefore, to be as important as tesing in order o grow stronger militarily. Once the world knows the facts, it can bring to bear the pressures for limitation of use which underlie the whole crusade for disarmament.

When one party goes ahead in secrecy to perfect terrible weapons, it is sheer folly for the other side to adhere to a one-sided suspension of tests. That's why many scientists in the know, Americans and Western Europeans alike, are worried and hope President Kennedy will not delay for long his fateful deci-

"IVAN THE AWFUL," like his American counterpart, does not know the local language nor do any of his staff except two. This is an sorry contrast to the American setup where many officials and even some of their wives speak Thai.

"Ivan's" common language with the Thais is English, the tongue of the "imperialists" whom both overthrow. He does have a couple of big advantages, however. One is a Moscow trained translator, who speaks excellent Thai. The other is that this translator is female and quite attractive.

Perhaps the lady translator was of some help to "Ivan" in putting over his biggest deal to date, a Soviet film show at Bangkok's Hall of Culture.

That took some doing because the Thais, openly nervous about Communist encroachment in neighboring Laos, have strict prohibitions against the dissemination of Communist propaganda within their country.

The government assented to let the show go on, but stipulated that the program must be approved beforehand and that the audience be limited to government officials and members of the diplomatic corps. "Ivan"

Compact space kitchen carries enough food to serve three men on a 14-day mission. Canned and dried foods are stored in pulldown bunkers, which also have bars along their length for pilots to hold onto. Since little water would be carried, it must be recovered from liquid wastes. Although containing everything a modern kitchen needs (except the sink), the experimental space kitchen weighs only 800 pounds and is just 71/2 feet high, 10 feet

Since water and other liquids won't behave in gravity-free space as they do on earth, they'll have to be taken through plastic squeeze tubes. Note knee bar, which keeps astronaut from sailing about the room by his own motions as he eats.

One of the biggest problems facing men planning extended space journeys is that of eating. Cramped quarters, limited weight a rocket could lift and the absence of gravity in space are some of the factors. Most of these have been solved in a prototype space kitchen developed by Whirlpool Corp. for the Air Force Systems Command.

Taking solid food container from three-cavity oven (in actual practice he would wear gloves), astronaut fits ratchet device in bottom. This expells food out of nipple. . Feeding tray at left holds items in the meal's menu until eaten.

Pictures above show the features of the amazingly compact kitchen. Menus? Astronauts may actually eat better than stayat-home earthlings. Meals planned by Air Force dieticians include Swiss steak, chicken, baked ham, green vegetables, etc. -even cakes and cookies. One problem space pilots can forget: There will be no dishes to wash

Taylor is reported in good condition after plastic surgery to remove a one-inch-long scar on the throat.

The operation was performed Wednesday and a spokesman said the actress is expected to leave Cedars of Lebanon Hospital in about four days.

The scar was a souvenir of Miss Taylor's near-fatal bout with pneumonia in London earlier this year. Surgeons performed a tracheotomy to ease her breathing.
